
How to deal with a girl after dating her for a few months Hi there and welcome, I'm 20 years old and just started dating my new girlfriend. I really like her and we get on well, but she's two years younger than me! I want to make sure that she is happy as well as me and that we both stay together as long as possible (hopefully for life). I've been out with girls before and we've all split up. The last one, we were together for nine months and we didn't split up as such as I went to university but it really hurt both of us as neither of us wanted to do it. I'm a little worried that this might happen with my new girlfriend. How can I make her want to stay with me? Should I tell her how much she means to me? How can I make sure that she wants to be with me for a long time? — Confused about a girl, London Hi Confused, I'm sure you already know this, but your girlfriend is going through the same things you are going through now. Because she's two years younger than you, she probably hasn't had as many girlfriends as you have. She might not know what to do either. I know what you mean about your last girlfriend having been with you for nine months and then going off to university and ending it. It's a terrible feeling when someone doesn't want to be in a relationship with you anymore, isn't it? But I think in this case, your girlfriend did the right thing. When I'm with a girl, I feel such a rush of love and happiness when we first meet. But as time goes on, I start to see faults and faults find their way into our relationship. That's why it's better to end things before they become too difficult to handle. Of course your girlfriend will be losing something (a boyfriend), and you'll be gaining her (the company of a girlfriend). You should tell her that you're worried about this and that you love her very much. That will make her feel special and make it easier for her to stay with you because she knows that she means the world to you. — Conor, Dublin

I'm happy with my boyfriend but we argue a lot about silly things. What can I do to stop it? Hi there and welcome, I'm 16 and in a relationship with a boy who is really nice and really cute, but we argue all the time. It turns into a big fight and then we don't speak for ages! For example, we were playing Xbox and then he put the controller down (he was winning) and I said 'put it down to give me a chance'. He said: 'No' and then I got mad. How can you get mad at someone for doing that? So we argued for almost an hour over stupid little things like that one.
